

DEPORTATION BY TURKS TOLD OF BY 2 WITNESSES

American Relief Workers Tell Of Deportation Of
The Greeks

Estimate 10,000 Deported
From July 1921 To March 1922

(By The Associated Press)

LONDON, July 31.—Two American relief workers, J. H. Knapp and Miss B. Bannerman Murdoch, who have arrived in Constantinople from Arabkir where they have been organizing relief among refugees, give further details of the deportations of Greeks and Armenians described previously by Major Yowell and Dr. Mark Ward. Arabkir is in the interior of Anatolia, 60 miles west-northwest of Kharput. They estimate that 10,000 deportees passed through Arabkir between July 1921 and March 1922. The signed report given by them to the British Armenia committee reads as follows:

Beginning in July 1921, the first installment of 600 deportees of Greek men of military age arrived. They were all from the Konia district. One hundred and fifty of these were Armenians, and were sent on to Elgin. The balance were Greeks. About 150 of these remained in Arabkir, and the balance were sent on to the Kharput and Diarbekir districts. Then came an installment of about 250 to 300 deportees, mostly Greek, from the Ordu district. There was sometimes a man with his whole family, but generally women without any male members of the family with them, and children.

"To a large portion of these it was necessary for us to furnish bread every day for the whole winter. There was another group of about 100 men over 50 years old; some appeared to be 90 years old. These remained a few weeks and then all but a few were sent on to the Kharput area. A huge drove of over 1,000 was the next to arrive in Arabkir in the late fall. They were herded on a hill above the city within 200 yards of a running ditch of water. They were not allowed to get water from this ditch, but were compelled to buy it from vendors. On a bleak, cold morning a few days afterwards they were started on their way towards Kharput. It was a sight that one can never forget, to see middle-aged and old women and men, to say nothing of the younger women and children, carrying on their backs large loads of bedding, food and fags, and in their hands pots and kettles, and perched upon their load a child.

"Many of these were destined never to reach their destination, as the storm which was brewing in the early morning on the mountains soon developed into a blizzard and the roads were left strewn with dead bodies. These things were personally seen by us, and in visiting one of the Armenian buildings where those who were unable to go on were left behind, we discovered several dead bodies on the floor and a number of other persons dying, with their children hanging over them. These scenes were only examples of many others which we witnessed during the deportations. Many of the women were unable to carry their children along, and were obliged to leave them on the roadside. We took in our orphanage about 20 of these children, and several of them were unable to survive the starvation and exposure they had undergone prior to reaching Arabkir.

"Personally I visited in Kharput several hospitals that were full of hundreds of Greek deportees, ill with typhus, and from one hospital it was reported that as many as 20 a day were carried to the cemetery. The stories of robberies and extortions told us by the deportees were almost universal. We were convinced from the policy of the Turkish government in forwarding these deportees to other places on days when the weather was extremely severe, that their intention was to subject them to such exposure that they would perish. Their policy of giving two rations of bread a day to the deportees who were working on their roads, which was insufficient for their nourishment, and then cutting it down when they showed signs of weakness to one ration, showed that slow starvation was also another method for accomplishing their extermination. "On our way from Arabkir through Kharput, Diarbekir and Urfa, we encountered these Greek deportees in every village and city, and thousands of them were at work on the road. Personally, we examined the rolls of deportees to whom Americans were giving bread every day in Kharput, and the number averaged 3500."
